

Kerry Consulting Group, Inc. Selected to Develop Strategic Technology Plan for the Houston Independent School District

Houston, TX / September 4, 2008 – Kerry Consulting Group, Inc. (KCG) has been selected by the Houston Independent School District to assist the district in the development of a comprehensive technology strategic plan.

Starting in late August, KCG began working with the district to identify and articulate the district's vision for technology, identify technology initiatives and projects to help the district achieve this vision, and obtain maximum benefits from federal funding.

"We are proud of our continued strategic partnership with the Houston Independent School District and are excited to have the opportunity to help define the future of technology in one of the best large public school systems in the United States," said Randy Langton, KCG's Chief Operating Officer.

Mike Reynolds, the Project Manager for this engagement added, "Ultimately, technology is a tool to leverage the quality instruction that is delivered by the 12,000 teachers within HISD. The strategic technology plan will ensure that the district deploys technologies that will contribute to student achievement and support the district's broad goal of creating a college bound culture."
